ISLANDERS

Rev. H. Bingham's
Pertinent Query.

WHERE SHALL
THESE PEOPLE GO?

History of the Little Settlement on the Sea Front—The Homesick Strangers.

Editor Advertiser: I have often asked myself whether it might not be my duty to ask you for the privilege of reaching the ear and heart of the public in behalf of the Gilbert Islanders, living in this Territory. I have long been interested, as you know, in the temporal and spiritual welfare of this people. I have frequently communicated facts to others concerning them, and my efforts in their behalf have not been without some measure of success. An article in your paper of this morning has as a part of its headlines the expression, "South Sea Settlement Must Go." After reading the article with the intensest interest, and having learned from it that the executive officer of the Board of Health had "stated that when Captain Merry, U. S. N., in command of the naval station, returned, the matter would be laid before him, and he was of the opinion that the officer would agree with him that the settlement must go." I asked myself, must go where?

Previous to the great fire of January, 1900, many of these people were to be found in the most wretched shacks in the neighborhood of Maunakea street. Driven from their miserable homes by the raging fire, and losing nearly every worldly possession, they took refuge at the invitation of the Government in Relief Camp No. 1. At first they occupied rooms rent free. At a later date rent was collected from such as were able to pay. Some were too poor to pay the small monthly amount, and they began to put up little huts near the sea wall, at the mouth of the harbor. Later on those still occupying Relief Camp No. 1, were ordered out and away, as the building was to be demolished. Again made homeless, and not feeling able to pay the rent demanded in other quarters for rooms, most of them joined their companions at the sea wall, and built for themselves, as you say in your article, "small shacks of driftwood, and almost anything that would keep out wind and rain, and have eked out a miserable existence by fishing and weaving hats." Not very long after they had brought me word that they had been ordered off. I went at once to Governor Dole in behalf of this poor people, and learned that the control of the property was really in the hands of the United States Government; but as the order to go had apparently come from a subordinate in the Territorial Government, the humane Governor promptly took steps in the matter, and the twenty-three shacks are still standing. But orders were soon issued by the United States Government that no additional buildings should be put up. Permission was subsequently granted that any shack might be replaced by a more commodious one. The little colony was again at peace, but their hearts yearned, as they had in years gone by, to return to their native island. Again and again have they come to me, with the hope that I might suggest some way whereby they might be returned to their own people. Not long ago I learned that there were parties here who would return them and companions in Lahaina, numbering in all about one hundred and fifty, to the Gilbert Islands, for the sum of $3,000, they to provide their own food. Can we imagine that these poor strangers could raise any such sum? Most of them had been promised a free return to their home after their three years' term of contract. Is then the question asked, why have they not been returned by the planters who employed them? The Gilbert Islanders were first introduced by the Hawaiian Government under the Monarchy through the Hawaiian Board of Immigration. They came in small vessels till some 1,500 had been brought here. I was requested by the Government to become their "protector," and as their three years' term of service expired, upon notification from myself the Government provided vessels to return them to their homes. It was found that about 300 had died. Numbers of them not having been able to lay aside anything from their earnings, felt ashamed to return to their friends empty-handed, and elected to remain until another opportunity offered.

Some 900 of them, however, went. The Government no longer tried the experiment of introducing this class of laborers, but later on a few of the planters asked permission of the Government to go to the Gilbert Islands to secure laborers for their plantations. This was granted on the promise that they should be returned free of expense to themselves at the end of their term of service. Other laborers had been returned, and new ones were willing to come. At the expiration of their term no opportunity was offered them. If their reports are to be believed, numbers of them were ordered to leave the plantations if they would not work. They were scattered over these islands; thinking they had been deceived, some of them reshipped on other plantations for a year. Some wiser than the rest, found employment as day laborers. The months rolled on, and a vessel from San Francisco, on its way to the Gilbert Islands for laborers for Mexico, touched here. The captain offered favorable terms to any who might wish to improve the opportunity to return. I was then no longer official protector of South Sea Islanders. But I notified the Government, and they again notified the planters that here was an opportunity to send the people back. About half of them were gathered from the group here in Honolulu, and gladly availed themselves of the chance. But alas, for those who had reshipped, they had lost their chance. One of the companies, consisting of about seventy or eighty, had arrived here after the sailing of that vessel, some fifteen years ago. No other opportunity has ever been offered them to go. Of that number only about twenty-five survive, and some of them are among those who will learn from this morning's paper they must go somewhere. I ask, Mr. Editor, where shall they go? They did not come here as tramps; they came fully expecting to return, and with the promise they should be returned. Some of them are advanced in years. Rice is not their natural food. Poi and fish are very expensive. It is very difficult for them to earn enough to hire suitable rooms and to procure necessary food. The climate does not agree with them, and no wonder some are dying with consumption. I doubt whether the rate of mortality would be lessened by their finding shelter in the slums of the city. I do hope before the Board of Health takes steps to turn them out of their present homes they will see to it that they either provide for them suitable permanent homes or secure for them a return to the Gilbert Islands.

EAST LYNNE TONIGHT.

Ellefelds Will Present the Popular Play.

East Lynne, to be presented tonight at the Orpheum, is one of the older plays that does not seem to have outlived its usefulness or its popularity. Nine out of ten of the touring repertoire companies invariably present it on Friday nights during their week stands, and many a company has moved to the next town on the receipts of East Lynne, when more modern plays on which a heavy royalty is paid, have failed to draw. It is a common saying among the profession that a company playing a three-night stand with Uncle Tom, East Lynne and Ten Nights in a Barroom, would present an irresistible combination and coin money.

Just where the attractions of East Lynne differentiate from other plays is a hard matter to decide. It is probably the growing up of a plot out of ordinary surroundings with the spiciness of scandal in high life that first drew public favor. The language used, too, is good, sound English, and the morals unimpeachable. At all events East Lynne always draws a crowded house, and will probably do so tonight. Miss Wierne and Miss Laird should present the opposing types of Lady Isabel and a Barbara in clear-cut fashion, and Berch is sure to make a good Carlyle. Walling, too, as Sir Francis, should give a good portrayal of the refined rogue. Baby Lillian will be in evidence and help to bring the tears that ever greet an East Lynne performance.

East Lynne will also be given at the matinee on Saturday afternoon, the seat sale for which promises a full house.
